Some of Gil's fellow students were Thornton Utz, Coby Whitmore, Al Buell, Andrew Loomis, Ben Stahl and Robert Skemp. Many of them eventually found work with Coca-Cola, as did Elvgren.

The delightful Ms. Hansen shares some of her pinup predicaments: "One time I had to perch high on some boxes, with my robe separating seductively, and reach out... pretending to coax a parakeet back into his cage. I almost broke my neck when the scarfing kind of fell down, knocking the lights and tripods over... just part of a normal day!" The painting that resulted is titled "Pretty Cagey."

Janet Rae is Gil's goddaughter and one of his favorite models. She grew up with the Elvgren children in Winnetka. In 1956, when both families moved to Sarasota, Florida, Janet began modeling for Gil in his split-level studio on Siesta Key. "With my parents' permission, naturally," says Janet, who was named after Gil's wife. At fifteen she was tall, slender, dark haired and gorgeous. She is still an attractive, articulate lady with an irresistible sense of humor.

Mosby spoke of Gil's amazing hands, which didn't look like those of an artist: "Gil is built like a football player and a pencil is almost buried in that huge paw of his, but the touch he has and the subtle variations he is capable of can only be compared to the sensitive skill of a surgeon."

Gil and Janet were blessed with three children. Karen was born in 1938, Gillette, Jr. came along four years later, and the youngest, Drake, arrived in 1944.

Drake Elvgren recalls one modeling session very well. "Dad's models were always wonderful... though I remember one who showed up with her gray-haired mother in tow. That old lady was a real tyrant and wouldn't let her daughter out of her sight... Can you imagine that poor kid... wearing little or nothing, trying to look sexy and alluring with her mother hovering over her? Later Dad and Bobby Toombs (Elvgren's apprentice) would laugh about it, but at the time things were pretty tense!"

Gil began illustrating books when he was eight years old. Unfortunately, he was usually punished for his efforts, as the sketches were done in the margins of his school books. When caught, Gil was sent home with notes to his parents enclosed in the offending book. His father, who had a keen appreciation for art himself, would read the note, gaze long and critically at the wonderful sketches and then write an apologetic letter to Gil's teacher. The incident would be forgotten... until the next time.

In 1937 Gil began painting calendar pinups for Louis F. Dow, one of America's leading publishing companies. These pinups are easily recognizable because they are signed with a printed version of Elvgren's name, as opposed to his later cursive signature. None of the original paintings Gil did for Dow is signed.

Beauty was never a guarantee that a model would end up with the job. Elvgren looked for models with vitality and personality, and chose young girls who were new to the modeling business. He felt they had freshness and spontaneity, which they sometimes lost after gaining experience and poise. His ideal pinup was a fifteen-year-old body, so combined the two.

The Distinguished Flying Medal

This medal was instituted in June, 1918, and is awarded to non-commissioned officers and men of the Air Forces for "an act of valour, courage, or devotion to duty performed whilst flying in active operations against the enemy". The letters D.F.M. are used after a recipient's name and bars may be awarded for subsequent acts.

The George Cross

King George VI instituted this award on 23rd September, 1940, for civilians of both sexes "for acts of the greatest heroism or of the most conspicuous courage in circumstances of extreme danger." Although intended primarily for civilians, there is a Military Division to permit its award to members of the Services for actions for which purely military honours are not normally granted. Recipients use the letters G.C. after their names, and bars may be awarded for further acts of bravery.

2.

The Distinguished Flying Cross

This decoration was instituted in June, 1918, for award to Officers and Warrant Officers of the Air Forces recommended for "an act of valour, courage, or devotion to duty performed whilst flying in active operations against the enemy". For further acts of bravery, bars may be awarded. Recipients use the letters D.F.C. after their names.

6.

Turkish Crimean Medal

Everyone who received the Crimean War Medal (see No. 18) was entitled to the Turkish medal, awarded by the Sultan of Turkey. Besides British troops, those of France and Sardinia also received this medal.
